The National Institutes of Health (NIH) reports that one in four 13- to 18-year-olds has had an anxiety disorder in their lifetime. Without intervention, they're at risk for poor performance, diminished learning and social/behavior problems in school. However, traditional behavior plans often do not meet the needs of students with anxiety and may even exacerbate inappropriate behavior. Understanding the role anxiety plays in a student's behavior is crucial, as well as analyzing how their environment may unintentionally reinforce the negative behavior. An effective behavior plan must avoid reward and punishment-based consequences and focus instead on teaching the student to cope and to use alternative responses. Incorporating preventative strategies and self-monitoring systems, as part of an overall anxiety management approach to behavior intervention, can be effectively implemented in school-based settings.

Upon completion of the program participants will:

• Understand the impact of anxiety on a child's learning and behavior
• Describe why traditional behavior plans of reward and consequences often do not work for students with challenges such as anxiety-related and oppositional behavior.
• Learn effective interventions that are easy to implement in a busy classroom.

Jessica Minahan, MEd, BCBA, is a board-certified behavior analyst and special educator and Director of Behavioral Services at NESCA-Newton (MA) (Neuropsychology & Education Services for Children and Adolescents), as well as a school consultant to client's nationwide. She is also the author of The Behavior Code: A Practical Guide to Understanding and Teaching the Most Challenging Students, with Nancy Rappaport (Harvard Education Press, 2012) and a blogger for the Huffington Post. Since 2000 she has worked with students who exhibit challenging behavior in both their homes and public schools. She specializes in training staff and creating behavior intervention plans for students with mental health challenges. Her particular interest is to serve these students by combining behavioral interventions with a comprehensive knowledge of best practices for those with complex mental health profiles and learning needs.
